KEYSTONE CANINE ACCOMPLISHMENTS

It has been a busy Rally year for Blaze and I. We, as a team, have earned our Rally 3 title, Rally 1 championship, Rally 2 Championship, and our Rally ARCH championship titles. It was a lot hard work because my boy is a tad excitable. Paula Shimko

"Lila" earned her NW2 title in Michigan this weekend. She came in first place in the interior search and first place overall in the trial. She was one of the 7 dogs receiving their title that day (out of 30 dogs). We also received P's in all 4 searches. A P indicates exceptional technique and teamwork.

This is kind of hard to write but here goes anyway. Miss Sarah aka "wiggle butt" has been my right-hand dog in the heel position for the past ten plus years but I noticed that she was slowing down just a bit in this past year and I attributed it to a lack of conditioning on my part. Kind of like I always tell students in my obedience classes how if their dog is a little overweight, then maybe they (not the dog) are not getting enough exercise and they should get the dog out more often. That always elicits a chuckle or two but they do get the point.

Long story short, about six months ago I decided to take a long walk around the neighborhood with Sarah and at the half mile mark, she just collapsed on me. Went down like a sack of hammers and looked at me with a real surprised look on her face. I picked her up and carried her to the house. By the time we got back to the house she seemed fine and I attributed it to lack of conditioning. Shorter walks along with some retrieves thrown in over the next couple of months didn't seem to faze her. When we went pheasant hunting it was a different story. Granted, the cover was thick, the black berry stalks and the multiflora rose was so thick it was hard for me to even get through. Sarah lasted about twenty minutes in this and then she just gave up and laid down. We left the youth hunt to the other dogs and headed for home. Not a real good showing for a little brown dog that usually pushes through anything.

About two weeks ago, I took her out for her morning "airing" and after doing her business, she just collapsed in the grass again with that strange look in her eyes. I brought her into the house in my arms and laid her on the carpet and sat with her for a while and then went into the other room to feed the other dog and low and behold, here comes Ms. wiggle butt. After feeding the dogs, I made an appointment with my vet and was given a green light that there didn't seem to be anything the matter, tongue, joints; everything seemed to be as it should be. This was on a Tuesday, Wednesday night we had a "wobbly episode" on the return from outside and so bright and early Thursday morning we headed for the Camp Horne Emergency Vet.

Come to find out that the blood sugar level was somewhere around 32 whereas it should be over 100 in a healthy dog. Diagnosis, insulinoma, or more familiarly, cancer of the pancreas. Prognosis is six months, give or take. We were offered surgery with chemo but the chances of finding the nodules were pretty slim and they were not evident on the ultra sound and the prognosis with surgery and chemo is only slightly better than feeding small meals more often to keep the blood sugar levels up. The recurrence of the neoplasms is normal with this kind of cancer, so there are no guarantees for a healthy dog.

So Ms. Sarah is effectively retired. We are grateful for whatever time we have with her. She misses riding with her dad in the truck, snoodling all the kiddoes at the elementary schools, bringing comfort to the Veterans at the VA hospital, hunting with the teenagers, snuggling with the seniors at the nursing homes, demonstrating at obedience training; just to name a few things that she does. It's a dull existence for a dog that is used to doing these things as well as running, jumping and doing the stairs. But at least we can make her short time with us a positive experience. I'm breaking now to give her a hand full of food and let her curl up on my chest as we watch TV together.
